

What is Disability Studies?

The interdisciplinary Minor in Disability Studies explores the experiences of people with disabilities—one of the largest minorities in the United States and worldwide—as well as the ways in which conceptions and representations of disability and “the normal” have shaped human experiences more generally.

Treating disability as a crucial element of human diversity and drawing on critical disability studies approaches, the Disability Studies Minor approaches disability as a social, cultural, and political construct rather than just a medical condition (as it is commonly viewed).

Mission

To transform lives by providing academic courses, programming, and internships that explore the experiences of people with disabilities—one of the largest minorities in the United States and worldwide—as well as the ways in which conceptions and representations of disability and “the normal” have shaped human experiences more broadly.

To model a campus community that centers disabled people’s leadership and expertise on disability and access and that emphasizes mentoring, self-advocacy, and allies’ respectful advocacy. The program also works to support scholarly research related to disability by our students and faculty.

Vision

To create a campus environment in which disability and ideas about ability and “the normal” are recognized as integral aspects of diversity, the human experience, and cultures and as invaluable to many academic fields and a diverse array of careers

To help the University of Texas at Arlington move towards being a model barrier-free campus: a truly disability-friendly campus that is training a disability-literate workforce informed by principles of disability equity, disability culture, and critical disability studies.

Advising

We require all new DS Minors to meet with us so that we can help them design a course and internship plan that matches their career and/or graduate school interests!

DS Internship

The Disability Studies Internship (DS 4395) is a supervised internship through which students apply the academic skills they have acquired in Disability Studies courses. Interns work at an approved business, academic, or non-profit site that focuses on adapted sports, disability history, assistive technology, disability rights and policy, or universal design and accessibility. Students should complete DS 4395 as one of their final courses for the minor and must have already taken or be taking DS/HIST 3307.

The student intern commits to working for a designated organization for approximately 9 hours a week for 13 weeks during a semester in an unpaid position (11 hours per week during the summer 11-week semester).
