

2014-2015 HONORS COLLOQUIA
“Culinary Shakespeare”
Professor Amy Tigner, Department of English

What did people eat in Shakespeare’s England, and how do his plays reflect both traditional and emergent attitudes about the preparation and consumption of food? In the first Honors Colloquium of the 2014-2015 Academic Year, Dr. Tigner of the English Department will discuss the exciting field of Food Studies in Early Modern England. You will never think about food the same way again.
