#WELCOMEWITHDIGNITY: EXPEDITED REMOVAL IS A FAST TRACK TO DANGER

On July 27, 2021, the U.S. Department of Homeland Security (DHS) announced it would begin using a process of rapid deportations known as “expedited removal” for certain families arriving at the border. The following day, July 28, 2021, the #WelcomeWithDignity campaign responded with deep concern about the administration’s decision to embrace a deterrence-based policy that frequently leads to the unlawful deportation of people seeking asylum, who are often denied the chance to request protection by Customs and Border Protection (CBP) officers. The policy will needlessly subject families to abusive treatment and inhumane conditions in CBP detention cells as the government seeks to deport them. The campaign also expressed deep disappointment given that member organizations sent a letter to DHS Secretary Alejandro Mayorkas earlier this year urging DHS to reject the use of expedited removal.

On the eve of the 70th anniversary of the 1951 Refugee Convention, the Biden administration should be fighting to uphold the universal human right to seek protection, not undermining it. Members of the #WelcomeWithDignity campaign responded: “The revival of expedited removal is a harmful return to policies that deprive people of their legal right to seek asylum,” said Denise Bell, Researcher for Refugee & Migrant Rights at Amnesty International USA. “This administration promised progress. Instead, under the guise of efficiency, it has opened the door to reviving dangerous practices that send families seeking safety back into harm’s way. Let’s not forget: this is also a human right the government is restricting access to...” Continue reading here

MASTERS OF SOCIAL WORK

I acknowledge the grave harm brought by colonialism to this land, especially the systematic attempts to erase indigenous and African identities through violence, slavery and racist segregation laws.
Simone Biles, the most decorated gymnast of all time, has stepped out of most of her Olympic events. Her reason? The need to focus on her mental health. At some point Simone lost her ability to stay present when competing and chose to withdraw from competing to avoid injury. I am in awe of both her self-awareness and her confidence to announce this to the world! Sometimes I struggle communicating my needs to just one person!

Since then, hundreds of articles have come out analyzing this situation. I won’t rehash other opinions, but there is one statement Simone made that had a significant impact on me. When asked about her teammates, Simone simply stated, “I knew they would be ok without me.” This is such a powerful statement that reminds me of something social workers often forget: We don’t need to take on the world alone.

We work at agencies that often have high caseloads and with clients that have many needs. We can easily get so wrapped up in everyone else’s concerns that we forget our own. I remember having the flu, but still making it to work because I had 6 clients to meet with that day. If I didn’t go in, my co-workers would have to divide my meetings between them. Even though I would gladly take on more clients so someone else could rest, I ignored that thought and headed to work anyways. I isolated myself in my office and met with people by phone instead. I remember my boss sent an email praising me for my efforts, but when I look back, I only see what I did as self-centered.

Simone could have been like me. She could have continued with the competition, and she could have still competed exceptionally well. Instead, she chose to look past the outside pressure that was screaming, “You’re the only one that can do it!” She knew her teammates were capable without her. To me, this level of self-awareness requires us quieting the ego. We can convince ourselves that the only option is to show up. Maybe that thought is coming from a desire to protect others from taking on more work, but what does that implicitly say about the people around us? It says that you can’t trust anyone else to handle what you can. It says your co-workers can’t help your clients the way that you can. It says your clients can’t handle a day without you. But that’s a little self-centered, isn’t it?

We still live in a world where we get congratulated for overworking. Simone helped us remember that we are not an island. We are a mong capable beings. We just have to replace that need to control with trust for our peers. Things will work out, even if it isn’t you working them out. So next time you need to rest, I hope you can follow Simone’s example of leaning on her teammates. You matter enough to deserve support 😊

P.S. – I also feel the need to mention that it is yet again BIPOC women, in particular black women, that are changing our world for the better. Let’s keep this momentum going! So when you see someone else taking the rest they need, send them support. If you see them getting pushback, make that support louder.

CAREER SPOTLIGHT

Corporate America + Social Work=

Corporate Social Responsibility

What is it?

As a Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) social worker, your job is to make positive social and environmental impact with the resources of a larger organization at your disposal. As a growing number of companies are investing more frequently in sustainability programs, social workers in this field are increasingly in demand to ensure the organization acts in an ethical manner.

Why would I want to do it?

Being a social worker in CSR, you would utilize micro and macro skills by understanding relationships, interpersonal dynamics and human behavior, coach workplace groups to increase productivity and fulfill short- and long-term objectives as well as experience higher compensation in a corporate setting.

How do I do it?

Being a CSR social worker requires the same credentials as being a regular social worker. CSR social workers will typically evaluate the organization as a whole, carrying out a systematic overview of the company's work environment, processes, problem-management and organizational structure.
