

UNIVERSITY OF TEXAS ARLINGTON | SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK

MSW PROGRAM WEEKLY UPDATE

February 19, 2020

African American Pioneer of the Week

George Edmond Haynes was a lifelong civil rights advocate and had a diverse educational background in social work. In fact, Haynes was the first African American to graduate from the New York School of Philanthropy (now the Columbia University School of Social Work).

Haynes went on to become co-founder and first executive director of the National Urban League. He then served as a special assistant to the secretary of labor (under the title of director of Negro economics), making him one of the two highest-ranking Black federal employees.

Faculty of the Week

Karen Magruder, LCSW is an Assistant Professor in Practice. Her practice experience includes mental health counseling, long-term care with older adults, program management and international public health. She has taught nine different courses at UTA, and recently created the new Green Social Work elective. Professor Magruder is also highly involved in developing the GSL Program.

Music

Music is universal and its power to transform is too! Music has been scientifically found to increase happiness, energy, alertness, even memory and cognitive performance - like studying, taking tests, and writing papers. Music improves your body's physical ability to move and exercise. Music benefits the cardiovascular system, including reductions in heart rate and blood pressure. Music reduces stress and pain in the body and lowers inflammation. Music gets us in touch with our emotions, elevates our moods, and can aid relaxation and rest, even improve sleep.

Leo Tolstoy said, "Under the influence of music it seems to me that I feel what I do not really feel, that I understand what I do not understand, that I can do what I cannot do." Music and its benefits are as diverse as we and our cultures are, and all you have to do is to interact with it. Make music, listen to music, dance to music, be moved by music, and be transformed!
